

Olivia James is an undergraduate sophomore at Lehigh University. She is currently enrolled in Art 007-Digital Photography, being her first photography class in college. She took 4 years of photography in High School and won many awards for her portraits. Her love for photography is shown in her projects as she depicts various elements of life in very interesting perspectives. She lives off campus in the city of Bethlehem and has always been interested in the contrast between the campus community and the residential one. She aimed to capture the various communities around campus, off campus and South Bethlehem that represent the Bethlehem and Lehigh University society that is depicted in this project.

Perspectives of Bethlehem

Olivia James

This body of work represents the different perspectives of the city of Bethlehem. They were taken on an Olympus camera from various points of view. I wanted to show the contrast between the environments on campus, off campus and some of South Bethlehem. I was always fascinated by the stark contrast of campus on the hill vs. off campus where most students live. These perspectives represent the different communities living within the same city. These photos are depictions of the way in which people live and interact among the city of Bethlehem and the Lehigh campus.
